Folks

We have some exceptional Boulder opal splits. A split is a piece of Boulder opal that has been chosen and the cutter has hit the opal so that the opal fractures and it stays either side of the host Boulder ironstone forming what we opal people call "opal splits". Splits are a mirror of each other and perfect for making earrings.

Below are a few Boulder opal splits that I secured from a miner whilst on a buying trip to Winton, Queensland earlier this year.

We sold one split to a lady and if you look below you can see her words and will see the excitement she is experiencing with her Boulder opal earrings. She was particularly fortunate in that one side of the split hadn't fractured all the way so she was able to get a small matching pendant as well.

I love both the earrings and the necklace, I already found a very nice white gold chain to wear with the pendent, we will need to send a picture.

I wore the set this past Sunday at a charity event and my girlfriends eyes almost popped out of her head when she saw them. She is also an October birthday girl. She said they were stunning and that she had never seen anything like them, she got that right.

Tomorrow is our national holiday of Thanksgiving and we are hosting the traditional turkey dinner at our house. I will be sporting my opals and waiting for the compliments to roll in.

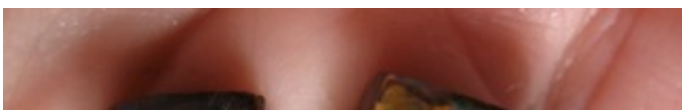

Regards

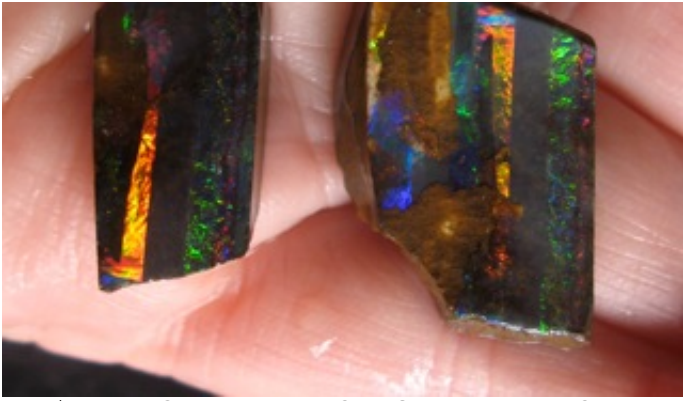

Murray
