When I recently attended an auction of a gallery which sold all types of jewels my eyes landed on two beautiful large Super Gem Triplets set in gold. I was going to have to have these triplets come left, right or centre. I've got them. Heather has spent over an hour trying to capture the beauty of these stones, she has done a good job. The camera cannot take images the same as a human eye. Below are some shots of these magnificent gems. We offer them to you for less than half the price that they were offered to people in one of Australia's top tourist galleries in The Rocks at the base of the Sydney Harbour Bridge. If you become the proud owner of one or both of these gems I believe that you will be securing a family heirloom. We don't want children and descendants arguing over possessions, these are that good. Many people are going to want them. I can highly recommend them to you.

We don't often see triplets like these today because the rough opal is so expensive that cutters can't afford to buy it and the super gem material is used for solid opal. Opal is becoming so scarce that cutters are very particular as to where they can get the best value.

The camera seems to be picking up a lot of blue whereas there is really a lot of red. As the triplets are rolled the red turns to blue and the camera is catching the blues rather than the reds. Sorry we don't know how to do a video, that's how sophisticated we are here. Believe me these are magnificent stones!!
